

lantern burns all night: that is the one the captain sees."

Rolfe paused, baffled.
"Then I believe I will light a cigar at your lantern," he finally said, and, turning, he moved away toward the low wooden building behind him. Ellis promptly followed, then sprang ahead and opened the door for his superior's entrance.

"Let me offer the captain a match; that is an oil lantern." And striking a lucifer on the strip of sandpaper he held it forth. Rolfe missed the flame with the end of his weed. Light came to him, but not to his cigar. Muffled though his face remained in the depths of that cavalry collar, Sergeant Ellis' lips and chin were visible through the opening in the front and in the glare of the little match.

"When did you shave off your beard, sergeant? I should hardly have known you."

The lips trembled, but the dark eyes, the deep voice, were steady as ever:
"Last evening, sir."

THE ARRIVAL OF THE HAMBURG STEAMER.

"Scandia," with a thousand passengers crowded into her steerage—the worst and filthiest class of immigrants that come to this country—and with a death roll of thirty-two en route and more cases developing, was the most discouraging incident reported from the New York quarantine station last week. The sick were promptly removed to Swinburne Island, and the work of disinfecting the ship and all on board immediately began. At this time of writing the cordon established by the health authorities has not been passed. The disease has been restricted to the ships. No cases have appeared in the city. The protests of cabin passengers on board the "Normannia," "Rugia" and "Moravia" against being detained on board pest-stricken vessels, led to measures of relief. The Navy Department offered the old line-of-battle ship "New Hampshire" for temporary quarters during the period of necessary isolation, and by the kindness of Mr. J. Pierpont Morgan, the Sound steamer "Stonington" was also placed at the disposal of the Hamburg Company as a temporary home for quarantined cabin passengers. Six hundred of these were speedily transferred to those clean and roomy, if not palatial, quarters. The unexpected development of cases of cholera on board the Guion steamer "Wyoming" after she had been pronounced clean and uninfected, and, after undergoing a brief detention, had received permission to land her passengers, was another disheartening incident, and frightfully suggestive of the narrowness of the peril escaped. At present there are nearly thirty vessels undergoing detention at the New York quarantine station; and though the cases of sickness and death are not numerous, they are sufficiently so to warrant extraordinary precautions. The very obvious duty of removing healthy passengers from exposure, and providing for them as much comfort as circumstances will allow, has been further met by the purchase of Fire Island by Gov. Flower of New York. The main hotel on that island will accommodate about five hundred people, and there are besides thirteen cottages. Two thousand persons can be fed and taken care of. The passengers transferred to the "Stonington" and "New Hampshire" will probably be sent to this island despite the protests of the townspeople, leaving these ships in readiness for further emergencies. The seven hundred saloon passengers of the "Wyoming" will also be transferred to Fire Island. For steerage passengers barracks and a hospital will be erected by the generosity of Mr. Austin Corbin, on a site on Sandy Hook, designated by the government for this purpose. It will be called "Camp Low," in honor of President Seth Low, of Columbia. It will be furnished with electric lights, and a strict patrol by U. S. Marines will be established. With these provisions there will be no hindrance or uncertainty in the future in dealing with infected ships. Abroad there was a noticeable decrease in the number of new choleraic cases last week, and also in the mortality.

General E. W. Whittaker of Washington is the owner of a part of the flag of truce employed by General Grant at Appomattox. The flag was a large white towel, but a piece of it was cut off several years ago and presented to General Custer, who was Whittaker's old commander. Whittaker, as a member of Custer's staff, received the flag on the occasion of the surrender from Captain Sims to General Longstreet's staff. The use of the towel was very significant, as it indicated that Lee had been wiped out and he had no further use for it. It is to be displayed at the coming Grand Army reunion.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE MONITOR]

Washington, Sept. 12, 1892.

The president will return to Washington this week, in order to see for himself that everything in the White House, as well as in the city generally, is in the proper condition to make the very best impression possible upon his comrades of the G. A. R., who will come to the encampment next week. He will find everything in "apple pie order," as the saying is, and so will the veterans, as there is a unanimous determination on the part of Washingtonians to outdo everything done by other cities and to make encampment week memorable in the annals of the National Capital, as well as in those of the G. A. R. The president does not expect to leave Washington for any extended period again this year, unless the health of Mrs. Harrison, who will go South to spend the winter, compels him to go to her. Washington is already beginning to put on its gala attire to receive the veterans who will begin to arrive by the last of this week. The program for encampment week is complete, and every hour of time between 9 a. m. and midnight of each day from Monday to Friday will be filled with interesting and enjoyable events. Committees will meet every train and escort the old soldiers to the quarters which have been allotted them.

Senator Mitchell of Oregon is one of the advance guard of the Congressional army which is coming to Washington to help make things pleasant for the old soldiers. He is utilizing the time before the encampment in attending to some department business for his constituents. At the close of the encampment he will return to Oregon with the G. A. R. men from the state, and take an aggressive part in the campaign. Of the general political outlook he says: "Everything I hear makes the victory of Harrison and Reid more certain. I am satisfied that New York will give Harrison a larger majority this year than in 1888." Asked about his own state, the senator said: "Oh, Oregon is all right; we shall carry the state, as usual, notwithstanding the activity of the people's party which may cast as many as 20,000 votes in the state."

Speaking of the people's party, if one may believe what is said by members of that party who are high up in its official councils, it is rapidly going to pieces in the South, where such great results had been so confidently predicted for it. Governor Tillman of South Carolina, whose recent sweeping victory over the regular democratic organization in that state is fresh in the minds of the public, is openly accused by the editor of the people's party's national organ of being a traitor to the people's party, and of having used the farmer's alliance as a club to thump a rival democratic faction, intending all the while to act with the national democratic party himself.

Hon. J. N. Huston, who usually knows everything worth knowing about Indiana politics, is in Washington. He says: "both parties are hard at work, with headquarters wide open at Indianapolis, and speakers busy stumping the state. This week Gov. McKinley will begin a stumping tour of the national gas region, and later we will have other noted outside orators. Republicans, with rare exceptions, which are becoming rarer, are confident of success, and if we succeed in our suit now in court, in overthrowing the present unjust and unconstitutional apportionment law we shall certainly sweep the state."

Democrats here "make no bones" of saying publicly that Mr. Cleveland has got to recognize Senator Hill, no matter how humiliating it may be to him, if he wishes to stand even the ghost of a chance of carrying New York, without which he can not possibly be elected.

The national democratic committee has made a "dicker" with the alliance bosses in So Dakota, whereby the democrats of that state are bound to support the alliance, or third party state ticket and the four electors are to be equally divided between Cleveland and Weaver. Senator Kyle is to take the stump for the fusion ticket and the national democratic committee is to furnish all the documents and boodle needed. Republicans here believe that this deal will bring the republican alliance men back to their first love, and result in electing the republican state ticket and electors.

At the seventh reunion of the Third Vermont regiment held at St. Johnsbury, Sept. 13, 50 veterans were present. A fine address was delivered by L. H. Dutton, teacher in the Hancock high school, Boston. T. J. Hastings of Glover was elected president; L. H. Dutton, vice-president; Col. S. E. Pingree, Hartford, secretary and treasurer.
